Electric Treatment for NEURITIS

THE AMERICAN WEEKLY of April 23, 1950, carried an interesting science article concerning the use of electronics in treating neuritis, rheumatism, and similar disorders. Although the use of electronic equipment for treating nerve disorders is relatively new, the office of Dr. Larson in Torrance has used the famous Lindquist Chrono wave for more than a year. This machine is reputed to have a closer approach to the human nerve impulse than any device yet manufactured.

Dr. Larson does not charge for consultation, and will be glad to explain his various methods used to relieve neuritis, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica and many other forms of painful affections.
